lizard, which isn't so hard a word. But a chameleon can turn different colors, which a lizard can't.

No, chameleons couldn't always turn different colors, and it is how they came to do so that this story is about Once upon a time chameleons were red and lived in the woods. Of course, all the other animals lived in the woods, too, and most of them were very fond of chameleons for dinner. And, naturally, that made it very unpleasant for the chameleons, because, being red, all the animals could see them so easily. So finally there were so few chame-leons that the animals hadn't eaten that they all got together and decided that something must be done. But they could not decide just what it should be. After awhile one of them said he would could not decide just what it should be. After awhile one of them said he would go to the Fairy Queen and tell her all about it. All the others thought this was a good idea, and so it was decided that Charlie Chameleon should go.

Charlie Chameleon started all right, but he had a very hard time of it. A few minutes after he had left the other chameleons he met a hungry lion, and just escaped by running into a hole that was too small for the lion to put his paw in. But as soon as he was inside he was scared again, because it was the home of a squirrel, and so he had to run out the other side to keep from being eaten. And there he met an owl, just going home, and he had to run for his life to the nearest hole in the ground. There he met a snake and had to run out of the hole and up a tree. And so it went, first one and then another animal tried to catch and eat him. When he finally did arrive at the Queen's palace he was so weak and frightened that he had to be put to bed and nursed for a week.

When he was well he told the Fairy

Hameleon is a big word for little folks to remember, but, just the same, he is a funny little creature that looks like a d, which isn't so hard a word. But mameleon can turn different colors, he alizard can't.

It was a fault to the word to be afraid, that he could help him. The magician went and got a hig pot full of water, which he put over the fire in the grate. When it was bolling he picked up the chameleon and started fout that he was afraid. "It won't hurt a bit," the magician rent colors, and it is how they to do so that this story is about the upon a time chameleons were red lived in the woods. Of course, all other animals lived in the woods, and most of them were very fond thameleons for dinner. And, natchameleons for dinner. And, natchameleon is a funny color the same as the all, just a funny color the same as the palace floor.

"There!" said the magician, "that's done. Now, come here."

This time the chameleon wasn't quite so afraid, so he went up to the ma-gician. First the magician sprinkled some powder over him, which made him sneeze. He sneezed and he sneezed until his eyes watered, and he felt him-self turning green. And that's just what he was doing, turning green. After that the magician threw some water on him

Queen all about himself and the other chameleons, and of how all the animals tried to eat them.

"That will never do," said the Queen.
"Come back in a week, and I will do something for you."

So the chameleon went away feeling very glad. But all the snimals had heard about his visit to the Fairy Queen, and they tried harder than ever to eat him. And Charlie Chameleon became so frightened that he shivered and shook, and was afraid to go out to hunt for food. So, when the time came for him to go to the Queen again, he was so thin he almost fell through a crack in the palace floor, and was shivering and shaking so the Queen sned great big tears.

"Oh! dear! Oh! dear!" she cried, "something must be done right away." So she sent for her magiclan. When he came she told him all about it, and ordered him to do something at once.

The chameleon was so thin and small that it was some time before the magician could find him, but when he did he felt so sorry for him that he promised to do what he could. The first thing he did was to go get a big book, which he studied some time. Then he told the Question of Vice Presidency Great Satisfaction Felt By Not Taken Up At White House.

Correspondence, which has been piling up more rapidly each day within the last month, detained President Taft this morning at the White House and is published today, contains the names he did not visit the Executive Offices. Al arge part of the correspondence is taken care of by Secretary Hilles, but there are numerous letters equiring the personal attention of the President. Letters of this character are expected to increase in volume with the progress of the campaign.

Information was given out at the White House today to the effect that no Cabinet officer has said that Vice President Sherman had been agreed upon as a candidate for Vice President, that the Vice Presidency was not discussed by William Barnes, jr., of New York, while at the White House yes-terday, and that the question of the Vice Presidential candidate had not been the subject of conversation at the White House. During the next month President Taft
